

SEPTEMBER 17, 2008 to DECEMBER 14, 2008

National Constitution Center Photo Library

For high resolution images or to request a shoot at the National Constitution Center, please contact Ashley Berke, Sr. Public Relations Manager, 215-409-6693 or Gina Romanelli, Education Public Relations Coordinator, 215-409-6696

1 Visitors to the National Constitution Center's Headed to the White House exhibition learn about the election history of the 50 states on a recreation of the floor of a national convention.

7 Students star in their own video campaign commercial, using the presidential "Ad-O-Matic" machine in the Headed to the White House exhibition.

2 A visitor creates her own campaign button in the Headed to the White House exhibition at the National Constitution Center

8 Visitors can take a seat in the Oval Office for the perfect presidential photo-op in the National Constitution Center's Headed to the White House exhibition.

3 A student practices one of the oldest presidential traditions – "kissing the baby" – while visiting the National Constitution Center's Headed to the White House exhibition.

9 A visitor serves as a journalist covering the election and uses a role-playing interactive to create a front page article in the Headed to the White House exhibition

4 Visitors to the Headed to the White House exhibition at the National Constitution Center learn more about election history from the first year they could vote.

10 A visitor to the National Constitution Center gets in some early practice casting a vote in the upcoming election.

5 A visitor learns what it's like to serve as a campaign worker during a role-playing interactive in the Headed to the White House exhibition.

11 Visitors to the Headed to the White House exhibition at the National Constitution Center cast their votes for president and watch as up-to-date election results come in 6 Visitors practice their presidential handshake in the National Constitution Center's Headed to the White House exhibition.

12 Using the National Constitution Center's signature "talk back" walls, visitors share their opinions about which candidates they are supporting and why by writing their responses on Post-it notes in the Headed to the White House exhibition.